DETAILED ACTION

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

Claims 1-26 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Escallon in view of Westrope et al.

Escallon teaches a system and method for creating a fully integrated interactive computer system for presentation of information to client computers and execution of transactions related to such presentation of information (column 2; lines 3-6). In particular the data contents of the information to be presented is created or compiled in accordance with desired data presentations and/or transaction to be presented and/or requested at client computers in the form of an electronic book (column 2; line 65 – column 3; line 2).

Escallon teaches the data contents of the electronic book includes for example any combination of static or dynamic presentations of text, graphics, audio and video information (column 3; lines 4-6). The production system may include, a multi-media authoring tool, graphics generator and editors and a corresponding compiler (column 3; lines 10-15).

Escallon further teaches that in the application of the invention to the electronic presentation of printed text the data may include a cover page, table of contents page and individual pages presenting information related to entries in the table of contents (column 3; lines 27-31). Examiner notes that the individual pages represent a detailed product presentation file, with headline file identifying the product, copy file with description, order block and a graphical representation of the product.

Escallon further teaches a transaction management system for processing order requests (e.g. Figure 3).

Escallon does not teach presenting a low-resolution scan of a catalog page and in response to a request for further information sending a higher resolution scan and a detailed product description. Westrope et al. teaches that electronic catalog data can be digitized in a data entry system which may comprise a document scanner (column 4; lines 30-35).

It would have been obvious to a person of ordinary skill in the art at the time the invention was made to modify the production system of Escallon to include a document scanner and to use the production system to capture images catalog as contents data for presentation to the user. One of ordinary skill in the art at the time of the invention would have been motivated to combine these references in order to accurately present the print version of catalog.

Examiner takes official notice that it is old and well known in the art to use thumbnail graphics (low resolution) on table of content pages and then based on a selection by the user to send larger (higher resolution) images with detailed information in order to decrease download times. It would have been obvious to a person of ordinary skill in the art at the time the invention was made to modify the table of contents of Escallon to include thumb nail images of the products and then to include higher resolution images with in the detailed description pages of the book, in order to decrease the download time for the electronic book.
